

How many times have we tried to rely on our own strength only to come to the stark realization that we need guidance from the divine Savior, at least if we are to arrive successfully?

This is the profound revelation wrapped up in the lyrics of 'Savior,' the new single slated for release on Friday July 5, 2019 from contemporary Christian music singer/songwriter Breanna Jade. The new artiste enters the music arena as a poised young lady who, while new to stardom, is not new to the music industry and is certain of her purpose and calling through a grounded foundation of strength and wisdom. 'Savior' was written and arranged by the talented 16 year old who grew up as the musical protégé under the influence of her earthly father, singer/songwriter icon Wayne Stoddart.

But Breanna Jade has her own voice, her own message and her own direction guided by her Heavenly Father, her Savior. Her vocals captivate listeners with a compelling yet unthreatening serenade that mirrors contemporary industry moguls like Paramore, Nicole Mullen, and Colbie Caillat along with the soothing voices of Nora Jones, Jill Scott and Christina Perri. 'Savior' is a peaceful plea, canvassed in methodical lyrics that tell the epic story of the human quest and subsequent struggle to find our way on the journey called life. It's a humble admission that without the savior, we "choke on our fears" and "struggle to get by" but upon recognition of our failing strength, can acquiesce to the gentle nudging that, "it's not for [us] to go through alone."

"I tried to get there on my own strength," resounds the mesmerizing voice of Jade, whose vocals are accompanied by smooth acoustic guitar with layers of California Pop rock guitar and echoes of piano and strings. 'Savior' is a message of hope thru travail and triumph through weakness. This is the classic sound of song that you put on your repeat playlist and leave it playing in the background only to find a new breezy burst of inspiration for your entire day.

"But it's not for you to go through alone; you need a friend to guide you home, Show you the way and hold your hand; you need a savior, a savior of man." Breanna Jade

▪ By: Shawna Brown